

"Feeding Chicken & K-9 Constipation"

Contributed by Martin Lieberman
Tuesday, 12 May 2009

Feeding your dogs chicken parts on occasion is ok. However, those readers that buy into the Billinghurst Ideology may run into issues. Some examples are oral punctures, choking & a cement like stool. All of which are unhealthy, perhaps deadly. If you feed necks & backs exclusively you reduce the chances of oral punctures. Those that feed weight bearing bones (thigh bones) are risking lacerated gums, cheeks & choking. Raw necks & backs in my view are far safer. In order to off set the cement stool issue, bathing the chicken parts in yogurt with a few table spoons dark local honey, may improve stool transit time & reduce the chalky stools.

An old trick of mine requires a meat grinder that will grind Chicken bones. Grind the Chickens rib cage, necks backs & long bones. Transplant reasonable amounts of the tiny bone fragments into ground beef. Your dog should continue to have a formed stool & you are feeding your dog a more species appropriate diet. Toss a raw egg in for good luck!